

What We Should All Know About Colorectal Cancer

This useful booklet, now in its second edition, brings together all relevant information regarding colorectal cancer.

What we should all know about... is a series of patient-oriented booklets produced by Mediscript in conjunction with leading medical experts. Written in easy-to-understand terms, the facts of the condition are explained and issues frequently raised in consultation are addressed in a questions and answers section.

What We Should All Know About Colorectal Cancer has been written to fulfil a need for patient information, particularly as many lay people find it difficult to talk about the bowel and associated problems. The book has been produced under the auspices of Dr David Cunningham, Head of the Gastroenterology and Lymphoma Units and a leading specialist in colorectal cancer at The Royal Marsden Hospital, Sutton, Surrey. Contributions have been made by Dr Justin Waters, a Clinical Research Fellow of the Department of Medicine at The Royal Marsden Hospital, and Mr Jon Tilsed, Consultant Colorectal Surgeon at Castle Hill Hospital, Hull. This handy-sized book outlines modern approaches to treatment, including diagrams of the latest surgical techniques, and will be an invaluable guide for general practitioners, patients and carers involved in colorectal cancer.

The key to good practice is up-to-date information. The book not only includes comprehensive details of UK-wide support groups but also lists a number of very useful websites providing information on specific aspects of colorectal cancer and, perhaps even more important, up-to-date research information.
